

What should you use a dictionary for?

We use dictionaries to:

- check how to spell words
- look up the meanings of words we don't know.

Using a dictionary can help you to widen your vocabulary, i.e. learn more words!

Why might it be useful to have a wide vocabulary?

- Your written and spoken English will improve because you will have more ways of saying what you want to say!
- Using a wide variety of words will make your writing more interesting to other readers.

Using a dictionary: guide words

Dictionaries usually have guide words at the top of each page, indicating the first and last words on the page.

Why do you think guide words are helpful?

What will a dictionary tell you?

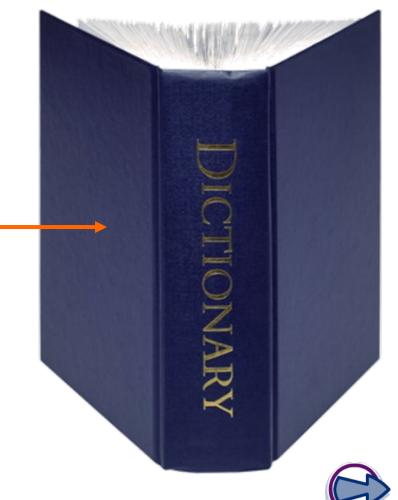

As well as telling you the spelling of word and its meaning or meanings, a dictionary can tell you many other things about a word!

It can tell you:

- what type of word it is (i.e. a noun, verb, adjective etc.)
- the origin of the word
- how the word is pronounced
- how to pronounce the word.

Using spellcheckers

When you are doing work on the computer, you will probably use the spellchecker tool in your word processing program to check the correct spellings of words.

Spellcheckers usually give various alternatives and you can choose the correct word.

However, it is important to be careful when using a computer spellchecker. It may miss some of your errors – particularly homophones and incorrect use of apostrophes.
