

Europe

Feudal Society in the Middle Ages

Introduction to the Middle Ages

Feudal Society in the Middle Ages

Renaissance and Reformation

European Expansion

Thematic Icons

Economics

Geography

Historical concepts

Government

Icons

Flash activity (these activities are not editable)

Teacher notes included in the Notes page

For more instructions, see the User Guide.

Society in medieval Europe was feudal. Relationships were formed by the exchange of goods and services.

Feudalism originated in the Frankish lands in the ninth century and spread throughout Europe during the 1000s.

Kings and Queens sat at the top of society, followed by nobles, knights and finally peasants.

What goods and services do you think each level was expected to provide?

The feudal system depended on the legal and military relationships between different members of society.

The king sat at the top of the feudal system. He would grant a fief (land) to a noble. In return, the noble would promise loyalty to the king and provide knights for military service.

The noble would then grant land to a knight and become his lord. The knight was referred to as his lord's vassal and would promise to protect his lord and fight for him.

Who might a knight grant land to?

A lord or knight might divide up any spare land amongst free peasants and serfs (unfree peasants who were bound to the land they worked).

The peasants did not own the land, but were allowed to farm it. Lords offered them protection and maintained law and order. In return, peasants gave food and offered their farming services to the lord.

The area run by a lord was known as a manor. These would have a manor house, a peasant village, a church and farmland.

Towards the end of the Middle Ages, feudalism began to decline across Europe. Reasons for this included:

- the increase of royal power and the decrease in the power of the nobility
- the need for laborers to join the military
- the Black Death, which decreased the population
- a series of peasant uprisings across Europe
- the decline of serfdom
- the rise of cities and an improving economy.

What effect would these have on feudalism?

The power of the monarchy

The English monarchy

Warfare was a common feature of medieval life. Most wars were fought between neighboring states or kingdoms, although there were examples of larger-scale warfare. Some wars took place internally, within a single country.

Reasons for fighting included:

- land
- money
- religion
- power.

Can you name any wars or battles that took place during the Middle Ages? What was the motivation for them?

There are many examples of medieval warfare.

- The 1066 Battle of Hastings between Harold Godwinson and Duke William of Normandy was for the English crown.
- The Crusades were a series of wars fought from 1096 until 1291 for control of the Holy Land.
- The Hundred Years' War was fought between France and England from 1337 until 1453 over trade concerns, political alliances and claims to the French crown.

Do you know who won these wars?

The Hundred Years' War

Military techniques and weaponry developed during this time.

- Castles were a major feature of the Middle Ages. Siege warfare was more common than full-scale battle and involved surrounding and blocking off access to a castle, town or fortress. If defendants did not surrender, troops might launch an attack.
- The longbow made its first major appearance at this time. This meant that long-range warfare could be fought.
- Gunpowder appeared in Europe towards the end of the Middle Ages and was used in cannons. It was particularly effective against castles.

During the Early Middle Ages, soldiers were drawn through the feudal system. Troops were raised through a feudal levy. This means that they were conscripted as part of an official program for enlisting soldiers.

Nobles were expected to provide trained soldiers. Serfs and freemen were recruited to the army through the levy. The length of service expected was quite short.

Why do you think this was?

During later periods of warfare, such as the Hundred Years' War (1337–1453), mercenaries were used. Mercenaries were soldiers who were hired to fight for a foreign army.

What impact did this have on feudalism?

The Black Death

The spread of the plague

Consequences of the plague

Approximately one-third of Europe's population died as a result of the Black Death.

Some historians argue that the Black Death improved the lives of the peasants who survived. Before the plague, Europe was overpopulated: there was not enough land for everyone to live off. Wages were low and lords could easily replace laborers.

The labor shortage caused by the Black Death meant peasants could demand higher wages and more freedom from their lords, as they could no longer be replaced so easily.

What impact did this have on European feudalism?

After the Black Death, peasants did begin to demand higher wages and more freedom. However, lords imposed strict controls upon their laborers.

Taxes were collected throughout this period to pay for the ongoing warfare. Peasants felt that they were being overtaxed and could not afford to pay.

As a result, there were a number of peasant uprisings across Europe during the second half of the fourteenth century. Rebels demanded freedom from oppression, lower taxes and peasant rights.

How successful do you think these revolts were?

Some of the most famous uprisings occurred in England and France.

- In 1356, French peasants revolted against feudal taxation and orders to improve defenses, in a rebellion known as the Jacquerie.
- In 1381, English peasants took part in the Peasant's Revolt, opposing the Poll Tax and the oppressive “Statute of Labourers”.

Through these rebellions, peasants gained a sense of their worth and began to demand individual rights.

How would these revolts affect attitudes towards the feudal system?

Decline of serfdom

Serfs were peasants who were not free and were bound to the land they worked on.

Over time, serfdom began to decline in western Europe. The population fall caused by the Black Death allowed serfs to challenge the agreements they had with their lords.

Opportunities for serfs to make money by selling goods were also developing. Lords began to recognize the potential of renting out land and became more willing to allow serfs to buy their freedom.

The decline of serfdom was gradual. Although it began during the Middle Ages and basically disappeared by the fifteenth century, serfdom did not officially end in France until 1798!

Before the Black Death, the population of Europe rose. At the same time, trade across Europe increased. Towns and cities grew and the economy improved.

What effect would this have on feudalism?

Serfs and peasants could move away from the manors and into the towns where there were new work opportunities.

The improved economy also increased the money in circulation. Knights and soldiers began to demand wages instead of land.

Nobles lost power as kings and queens increased their strength. War and plague reduced the labor force and cities provided new opportunities.

Which factor contributed the most to the decline of feudalism at the end of the Middle Ages?

As feudalism declined, nation states began to develop.

A nation state is an area of land (state) inhabited by a group of people (nation) with a common language, law and culture.

Can you name any nation states?

Keywords

